

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

HISTORY OF THE LIBRARY

AT his death on 17th July 1790, Adam Smith's library went by will to his young cousin David Douglas, son of Colonel Robert Douglas of Strathendry, Fifeshire. David Douglas was born 1769, and, after studying law under Millar of Glasgow and passing as Advocate at Edinburgh in 1791, became Sheriff-Depute of Berwickshire in 1809, was raised to the bench as Lord Reston (from an estate of Reston in Haddington) in 1813, and afterwards became a Lord of Justiciary (1816). He died on 23rd April 1819.¹ He probably sympathized to some extent with his cousin's tastes, for it is set down in the History of the Speculative Society that he read a paper there on 30th November 1790 on "The Effects of Taxation on the Necessaries of Life."

On Lord Reston's death the library was divided between his two daughters, Mrs. Cunningham of Prestonpans, and Mrs. Bannerman of Edinburgh. On the death of Mrs. Bannerman (1879) her portion of the library went to her son, Rev. David Douglas Bannerman, D.D., now at Perth, who in 1884 presented a part to the New College (of the Free Church), Edinburgh.

On the death of her husband, the Rev. W. B. Cunningham of Prestonpans (1878), Mrs. Cunningham sold some of the books at Edinburgh. Several were purchased by the late Professor Hodgson, and were presented to the University library by Mrs. Hodgson in 1880.¹ The remaining books of Mrs. Cunningham's portion were given by her to her son, Professor R. O. Cunningham of Queen's College, Belfast, by whom a part is still retained and a part has been presented to the library of Queen's College.

The various possessors of books known to have belonged to the library of Adam Smith have been requested to supply information about them; and the response has been in all cases courteous and cordial. The catalogues so furnished do not materially differ from each other in principle, and in most cases it has not been difficult to establish the identity of the books concerned. Where the information supplied by the possessors has been supplemented from other sources, the additions are enclosed in square brackets.

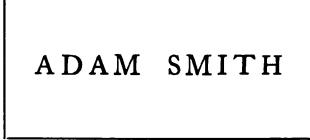

The present Catalogue includes a great part of Adam Smith's library. Dr. Bannerman's half, still kept intact (though in two places), includes about 1400 volumes. MacCulloch, who saw the books before the dispersion, reckons their number at 5000. Dugald Stewart says Adam Smith possessed "a small but excellent library, which he had gradually formed with great judgment in the selection" (Life prefixed to Essays, p. lxxxv.) The entries in the present Catalogue amount to about 1000, and the volumes to about 2200. The whole collection was more probably 3000 than 5000. Most of the books are bound solidly in calf. One or two are richly decorated, being presentation copies. William Smellie (in his Literary and Characteristical Lives of Gregory, Kames, Hume, and Adam Smith, 1800) tells us that Adam Smith said to him, "I am a beau in nothing but my books." But as a rule he seems to have aimed at strength rather than elegance of binding, and was no hunter of rarities or choice editions.

A letter of Dupont to Adam Smith was found between the leaves of a presentation copy of a book of Dupont's, and has been printed for the first time in this volume (see Dupont). There is a Manuscript (on parchment) of Venetian Statutes that is probably of value. Other particulars of interest in regard to the volumes have been given in the course of the Catalogue.

The editor has been able only in a very few cases to see and handle the books for himself. He is assured that, unless special note is made to the contrary, each book bears the (very plain) bookplate of Adam Smith :

ADAM SMITH

The chief facts of Adam Smith's life are as follows. He was the son of Adam Smith (lawyer and Customs' comptroller at Kirkcaldy) and Margaret Douglas of Strathendry ; and he was born probably at the beginning of June 1723.¹ He was a student at Glasgow University from 1737 to 1740, and at Balliol College, Oxford (as Snell Exhibitioner) from 1740 to 1747. After a year and a half at Kirkcaldy he came to Edinburgh and lectured on belles lettres (1748-50). In 1751 he was made Professor of Logic at Glasgow University, and in 1752 Professor of Moral Philosophy. In 1759 he published his Theory of Moral Sentiments. In 1764 he was persuaded by Charles Townshend to go abroad with the young Buccleuch to Toulouse, Geneva, and Paris, resigning his chair of Moral Philosophy. He was back in London in 1766 and at Kirkcaldy in 1767, devoting himself to his Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations, which appeared in 1776, just before the death of Hume. In 1778 he became a Commissioner of Customs in Edinburgh. In 1787 he was chosen Rector of his old University, and on 17th July 1790 he died at his residence, Panmure House, Canongate. He is buried in Canongate Churchyard. His last years were saddened by the loss of his mother and his cousin (Miss Jane Douglas), the former of whom died in 1784 and the latter in 1788. The ground-plan of the house at Kirkcaldy occupied by Adam Smith, as by his father before him, is still preserved in that town, and is reproduced here. Its date is 1776. The front elevation faced the High Street, and the garden stretched down towards the sea-shore.

The Will of Adam Smith has been printed here, because governing the disposal of his books ; and a full list of his Works has been given, because frequent reference to them is part of the plan of this Catalogue. As there is promise of a Biography from the pen of Mr. John Rae, no attempt has been made to go into the details of his life.

The preparation of this Catalogue was undertaken on behalf of the Economic Club, meeting at University College, London. Professor Foxwell and Mr. Henry Higgs, of that club, have given valuable help in the revision of the proofs ; and Professor Foxwell has kindly allowed the reproduction, in lithograph, of a letter of Adam Smith now in his possession.

THE PORTRAITS OF ADAM SMITH

To the student of Adam Smith, who is interested in his personality and desirous of realising the visible presence of the man as he lived, it must be a matter for regret that the verbal descriptions of the appearance of the author of the Wealth of Nations, and the examples of graphic and plastic art that portray it, are not only few in number, but also very meagre in the details that they have preserved.

There exist two brief biographies of Adam Smith by writers who had personally known him. The earlier is that read by Professor Dugald Stewart before the Royal Society of Edinburgh on 21st January and 18th March 1793, and published in 1794 in the third volume of its Transactions, in the volume of Adam Smith's Essays (1795), and afterwards in the Scots Magazine for January and February 1796, and in various editions of Smith's works. [It is also one of the Biographical Memoirs (Adam Smith, William Robertson, and Thomas Reid) published by Dugald Stewart at Edinburgh 1811.] From Professor Stewart's account we learn a good deal regarding the little peculiarities of gesture that characterised his friend; but he gives little of such definite description of face or figure as might enable us to realise the aspect of the living man : indeed the writer only remarks generally of his subject that “in his external form and appearance there was nothing uncommon,” and that there were moments “when his features were brightened with a smile of inexpressible benignity.”

William Smellie in the biography of Smith in his Literary and Characteristical Lives (Edinburgh, 1800), largely founded upon Stewart, and in parts only a slightly varied paraphrase of his words, adds little to our mental picture of the man. He, however, informs us that “in stature he somewhat exceeded the ordinary size ; and his countenance was manly and agreeable.”

But Professor Stewart has given us, in one of the sentences of his memoir, the best direction to the authentic portraits of Adam Smith that exists. “He never sat,” the Professor informs us, “for his picture, but the medallion of Tassie conveys an exact idea of his profile, and of the general expression of his countenance.”

The medallion in question is one of the large portrait subjects of James Tassie which were originally modelled in wax, usually directly from life, and afterwards cast in the hard white enamel, a fine, slightly translucent, glassy paste, invented by the artist and Dr. Henry Quin of Dublin. The head, which appears turned in pure profile to the right of the spectator, shows a particularly full forehead, a full nose, slightly aquiline in its curve ; a long thin upper lip and a lower lip that protrudes a little ; and a firm, well-shaped chin and jaw. The eyebrow is strongly curved, the upper eyelid heavy and drooping, the eyeball particularly prominent ; and beneath the lower eyelid the skin is loose and wrinkled. A wig is worn, tied behind in a bag with ribbons, showing small curls in front, and two large curls at the side which cover and conceal the ear. The bust is clad in a coat with a broad collar but with no lapels, tightly buttoned up at the chin, and showing above it a thin line of the cravat. The truncation is inscribed, in impressed letters, “Adam Smith in his 64th year. 1787. Tassie F.” The size, from top of head to bottom of bust, is 3 inches.

We have no certain information as to whether this medallion was executed from actual sittings, though, judging from its style, I should conclude that it was done directly from the life. The phrase used by Stewart might be held to imply that Smith never sat to any artist at all. This is further confirmed by the tradition current in the family, and communicated to me by a descendant of his cousin, that he had the strongest dislike to sitting for his portrait, and that his friends could never persuade him to do so, though he induced his mother to be painted, in a work dated 1778 and now in the possession of Professor R. O. Cunningham of Belfast, by C. Metz, an artist then working in Edinburgh. Metz was also patronised by the Earl of Buchan, for whom he executed, from a pencil drawing and a death-mask, the portrait of Professor Colin Maclaurin, engraved in Pinkerton’s Scottish Gallery and in Smith’s Iconographia Scotica.

It is, however, possible enough that Smith sat to Tassie, for this artist was in the habit of making things very easy for his sitters. While portraying them he by no means required their undivided attention, but, as Thomas Walker of Manchester, of whom he executed a medallion in 1798, has recorded, “you may be occupied almost as you will, eating, writing, etc., as he only needs a few minutes’ sitting at finishing a few particular parts.” Tassie, too, possessed an especial faculty for working from memory; and in this way in a sitter’s absence he frequently succeeded in catching a likeness which had eluded him when he was in the actual presence of his subject.

It is to be noticed that the medallion was executed at a time when Smith's permanent residence was in Edinburgh, in 1787, the year of his election as Rector of the University of Glasgow. We have it, however, on the authority of the memoir given [by James Paterson, the antiquary] in Kay's Portraits that during the last twelve years of his life "he now and then revisited London," where Tassie was then at work.¹

But whether this Tassie medallion was executed directly from life, as is most probable, or merely from memory, Professor Stewart's testimony assures us of the one important fact, that it is a faithful likeness of the author of the Wealth of Nations.

This medallion, which exists, but uninscribed, in Wedgwood paste as well as in the enamel of Tassie, has been very frequently engraved, in prints which too often convey an incorrect impression of the original, sometimes in consequence of deliberate alterations, as is the case in the lithograph by "R. S. Michie, Edinburgh," where the figure is shown to the waist, and a lapel is added to the coat, which is entirely altered in form, and made to show more of the cravat, sometimes from mere want of skill on the part of the engraver. A very poor unsigned transcript in line appeared in the Scots Magazine for January 1796; but in May 1801 another more faithful print by Beugo was given, along with the statement that the former engraving "was not executed to our mind." The most correct renderings are the line-engravings by John Horsburgh (Wealth of Nations, 1828), and by R. C. Bell (Wealth of Nations, 1872), and the half-size reproduction in James and William Tassie (Edinburgh, 1894).

A reduced version of this medallion exists in Tassie enamel, taken from a gem engraved by Warner, whose name, “Warner Ft.,” appears on the truncation, while the name “Adam Smith” appears behind the head, both in raised letters. In this reduction the head and bust are $\frac{1}{6}$ inches in height.

James Tassie also executed a large version of his medallion in what he styled “the antique manner,” that is to say, without the wig, and with the neck and breast bare. This work has the advantage of showing the rounded form of the head, covered with rather curling hair and curving upwards from the brow to a point above the large ear, which is hidden in the other version. It is the same size as the first-named medallion; and the inscription on the truncation is almost identical, “Adam Smith in his 64th year. 1787. Tassie F.” I have not seen any engravings from this medallion “in the antique manner.”

The earlier of the two etched portraits by John Kay in which Adam Smith appears is signed “K. Fec. 1787,” and was consequently executed in the same year as the medallions by Tassie. Here he appears as a small full-length figure, standing in profile to our right, between the taller forms of Lord Rockville and Commissioner Brown. The close resemblance in position of head, wig, collar of coat, etc., suggest that the etching is founded upon the medallion, doubtless supplemented by Kay’s own recollection of Smith, as he walked the Edinburgh streets. The features are very similar to those portrayed by Tassie, but the lower lip has more protrusion. The head is covered with a broad-brimmed hat; and the costume is knee-breeches, with shoes with square buckles, and a light coat, similar to the costume described in the letterpress to Kay’s plate No. XI. vol. i., “Dr. James Graham,” as “white linen clothes.” He carries a cane in his right hand, in the attitude described by Smellie, “In the streets, or elsewhere, he always carried his cane on his shoulder, as a soldier does his

"musket," and his left hand holds a bunch of flowers, for which, however, we find no authority in any of the accounts of his life.

The second etching by Kay is dated 1790, and was probably a memorial work, executed after the death of its subject for sale to his friends and the general public. It is a larger and more elaborate work than the former etching, but the faces, in their position and features, are practically identical in both. Here a cocked hat replaces the broad-brimmed one ; a dark coat with large buttons and a broad collar, but without a lapel, is worn ; a cane is held in the right hand, and the left points to a volume of his great work, which lies, with writing materials and other books, on a table. The figure stands on a tessellated pavement [very much out of perspective], and behind, in an inner room, there appears a bookcase.

Both etchings are included in the collected editions of Kay's Original Portraits.

Among the painted portraits which have been claimed as representing Adam Smith is one that was for many years in the possession of a family in Kirkcaldy, named Muir, and now belongs to a private owner in Edinburgh. It is an oil painting by an unknown artist, showing the figure nearly to the waist ; and the mutual proportions of the head and the figure are suggestive of a very tall man. The face, the features of which resemble those that appear in the Tassie medallions, is turned in three-quarters to our right. The eyes are hazel-brown in colour, their balls less full and prominent than in the medallions,—as compared with which the upper lip is shorter and the nose smaller, though similar in character. The lower lip protrudes a little, as shown by Tassie, and is particularly long. The costume is a coat of a black colour, slightly tinged with a greenish tone, and its shadows are very effectively touched in.

It has a broad collar, but no lapel, and is buttoned up to the throat as in the first-named medallion, three black buttons appearing. A portion of a white cravat is visible at the neck, and a wig is worn, concealing the ear.

I am distinctly of opinion that this work is a portrait of Adam Smith, painted after his death and founded upon the first-named Tassie medallion. In this view I am confirmed by the style of the painting, which is that of the earlier part of the present century, not of the last century; by the execution, which, while it is bold and broadly effective, has none of the searching detail, the seizure of little individualities, which is characteristic of work done directly from life; and by the fact that the wig has evidently not been painted from the object, but adapted to its present position from the medallion, and its form having been misunderstood by the painter, its peak in front does not appear in the centre of the forehead, but turned to one side.

Another painting which has been regarded as a portrait of Adam Smith is that presented to the National Museum of Antiquities, Edinburgh, by the Trustees of David Laing, LL.D. Nothing is known of the previous history of the picture; and evidently the reason for its being titled with the name of Adam Smith is simply the fact that on a table, beside the seated figure, there appears a book, the back of which is inscribed "Wealth of Nations, Vol. I.", indicating that the portrait either represents the author himself, or some very enthusiastic friend or admirer.

The figure is almost a full length, the face turned slightly to our left. His right hand is laid on his left knee, which is crossed over the right one; and his left elbow rests on the arm of the red-cushioned arm-chair of brown wood in which he sits, his left hand being held up, and its index finger separated from the others, as though to emphasise the words that he is uttering; an attitude that recalls a passage in Smellie's Life of Smith, where it is recorded that "he was occasionally disposed to express his own ideas somewhat in the form of a lecture." The features show a certain general resemblance to those that appear in the medallions; but the eyes, which are of a blue colour with a yellowish touch in it, are very different, showing none of the prominence in the eyeballs, or of the drooping in the upper lids which Tassie has portrayed. The costume is a dark-blue coat, without a lapel, and with a red collar and brass buttons, a white vest and stockings, black knee-breeches with silver buckles, frills at breast and wrists, and a wig covering the ears. Above and to our right appears a red curtain; and on the table on the other side is the volume already referred to, several bundles of papers, and a silver ink bottle, with two quills. This table is covered with a green cloth, patterned in yellow, and on this is inscribed in white letters the signature "Ty. Collopy Pinx," doubtless the artist who appears in the Royal Academy Catalogue of 1786, when he exhibited No. 26, "Lady, gentleman, and child," and No. 412, "The Crucifixion, sketch for Altar-piece in Ireland," as "— Collopy," residing at 4 Little Madox Street, Hanover Square, London; and in [that of] 1788, when he exhibited a portrait of a Mr. Agar, as "— Collopy," at the same address.

I may mention that Mr. D. W. Stevenson, R.S.A., is of opinion that this painting represents Adam Smith at a younger age than he was portrayed by Tassie; but for my own part I do not consider that we have sufficient evidence for regarding it as an authentic portrait, especially in view of Stewart's definite statement that Smith never sat for his picture.

There exist various posthumous works of sculpture representing Adam Smith, all of them that possess any value as likenesses being founded upon Tassie's medallions. Among these is the marble bust in the Corporation Galleries, Glasgow, produced by Patric Park, R.S.A., in London in 1845. A bust was executed by Baron Marochetti, of which a large version in marble, dated 1851, is in the Town Hall, Kirkcaldy, and a small version in bronze in the Common-room of Balliol College, Oxford. A marble statue, rather larger than life, executed by Gasser of Vienna about 1867, was purchased by the Adam Smith Club, Glasgow, and deposited in the Hunterian Collection of the University there, a previous effort to secure it for "one of the buildings belonging to the University" of Oxford having failed. This statue also exists in reduced facsimiles in plaster, one of which is in the possession of Mrs. J. E. Thorold Rogers, Oxford. In 1879 J. Durham, A.R.A., modelled a statuette of Adam Smith, a plaster cast of which is in the possession of Mr. D. Storrar, Kirkcaldy. Here he appears as a comparatively young man, seated, leaning back, in a meditative attitude in a chair, his right hand supporting his cheek, and his left holding a manuscript upon his knee. There is also a statuette of Adam Smith, dated 1887, the work of Mr. Charles M'Bride of Edinburgh, plaster casts of which are in the Library of Balliol College, Oxford, and in the possession of various private owners. In 1888 Mr. D. W. Stevenson, R.S.A., was commissioned by Dr. Robert Halliday Gunning to execute a bust of Adam Smith in marble, which he presented to the Wallace Monument, Stirling, in the following year. I may also mention that a statue of Adam Smith is in the westernmost niche of the west wing (exterior) of the ground-floor of the University Buildings, London, facing north in Burlington Gardens. [It is a standing figure larger than life. The sculptor was Mr. Durham. The six figures in the niches are Cuvier, Leibnitz, Linnæus on the east side; Locke, Bacon, Adam Smith on the west side of the entrance. The statue is probably the result of a study of Kay and Tassie. The features are idealized. The posture is majestic. The curls of the wig are exaggerated. The head is bare. The right hand is lowered and grasps a book. The left is raised and gathers up the teacher's gown. One foot is slightly advanced. On the right side of the feet there lies a book, and on the left a roll of paper.]

ADAM SMITH ON PORTRAIT PAINTING

THE following remarks (in the Essay of the External Senses, pp. 225-226) were perhaps suggested by the writer's interviews with Tassie :—

“ It has been said that no man ever saw the same visible object twice; and this, though no doubt an exaggeration, is in reality much less so than at first view it appears to be. Though I am apt to fancy that all the chairs and tables and other little pieces of furniture in the room where I am sitting appear to my eye always the same, yet their appearance is in reality continually varying, not only according to every variation in their situation and distance with regard to where I am sitting, but according to every, even the most insensible variation in the attitude of my body, in the movement of my head, or even in that of my eyes.¹ The perspective necessarily varies according to all, even the smallest of these variations, and consequently the appearance of the object which that perspective presents to me. Observe what difficulty a portrait painter finds in getting the person who sits for his picture to present to him precisely that view of the countenance from which the first outline was drawn. The painter is scarce ever completely satisfied with the situation of the face which is presented to him, and finds that it is scarcely ever precisely the same with that from which he rapidly sketched the first outline. He endeavours, as well as he can, to correct the difference from memory, from fancy, and from a sort of art of approximation, by which he strives to express, as nearly as he can, the ordinary effect of the look, air, and character of the person whose picture he is drawing. The person who draws from a statue, which is altogether immovable, feels a difficulty, though no doubt in a less degree, of the same kind. It arises altogether from the difficulty which he finds in placing his own eye precisely in the same situation during the whole time which he employs in completing his drawing. This difficulty is more than doubled upon the painter who draws from a living subject. The statue never is the cause of any variation or unsteadiness in its own appearance. The living subject frequently is."

ANALYSIS OF THE LIBRARY

A ROUGH analysis of the contents of the following Catalogue shows about 1-5th of the books to be on Literature and Art, 1-5th of Classical (Latin and Greek) authors, or their commentators, and 1-5th on Law, Politics, and Geography. Works on Political Economy and on History make up another fifth, in nearly equal proportions. Science and Philosophy divide the remaining fifth, if we omit a small group of miscellaneous volumes (chiefly biographical).

More than a third are in English, a little less than a third in French, and rather less than a quarter in Latin ; Italian and Greek accounting for the remainder in nearly equal proportions. There are three German, all presentation copies, and translations of the author's works. No other languages are represented.

The editor is under great obligation to the Rev. Dr. Bannerman, Professor R. O. Cunningham, and the other contributors in various parts of the country and the world. In his local inquiries he has received effectual help from Mr. Lewis Grant of Kirkcaldy ; Mr. William K. Dickson, advocate, Edinburgh ; the late Mr. John M. Gray, curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery ; Mr. L. L. Price, Oriel College, Oxford ; and Mr. Arthur Milman, of the London University, Burlington House.

From the nature of the case, the work is incomplete ; but perhaps the very publication of this Catalogue may reveal the hiding-place of missing volumes.

[Vols. i.-iv. 1768-69; vol. v. 1789.] Such is the description of the copy of this book in the library of the Comte de Mirabeau (see the Catalogue des Livres de la Bibliothèque de feu M. Mirabeau l'Aîné, Député et ex-Président de l'Assemblée Nationale Constituante, 1791 [prepared for the sale in January 1792]).
	A copy is known to have been in the possession of Adam Smith. In Sir John Sinclair's Correspondence (1831), vol. i. 388, the author says he asked Adam Smith for the loan of this book,

"which I knew was in the Doctor's possession." He received the following answer:—

"Mr. Smith presents his most respectful compliments to Mr. Sinclair of Ulbster.

The 'Mémoires sur les Finances' [sic!]¹ are engaged for four months to come to Mr. John Davidson. When he has done with them, Mr. Smith would be very happy to accommodate Mr. Sinclair; but he acknowledges he is a little uneasy about the safety of the conveyance and the greatness of the distance [Ulbster was in Caithness]. He has frequent occasion to consult the book himself, both in the course of his private studies and in the business of his present employment [as Commissioner of Customs], and is therefore not very willing to let it go out of Edinburgh. The book was never properly published; but there were a few more copies printed than were necessary for the commission for whose use it was compiled.

One of these I obtained by the particular favour of Mr. Turgot, the late Controller-General of the Finances. I have heard but of three other copies in Great Britain. One belongs to a noble lord, who obtained it by connivance, as he told me; one is in the Secretary of State's office, and the third belongs to a private gentleman. How these two were obtained, I know not, but suspect it was in the same manner. If any accident should happen to my book, the loss is perfectly irreparable. When Mr. Sinclair comes to Edinburgh, I shall be very happy to communicate to him not only that book but everything else I have upon the subject, both printed and manuscript; and am, with the highest respect for his character, his most obedient humble servant,

ADAM SMITH.

Edinburgh, 24th November, 1778."

The copy in Mirabeau's library may possibly have been reserved from his father's library, which was sold after the death of its owner on 11th July 1789. The Catalogue of the Count's books already mentioned has appended to it a list of the prices fetched at the sale (held on 9th

¹ This is more nearly the title of a book by Déon de Beaumont, "Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire générale des Finances" (Londres, 1758, 2 vols. 12mo). But the description in this letter, as well as the references occurring in the Wealth of Nations, could apply only to the Mémoires, by Moreau de Beaumont.

Jan. 1792 at the Hotel de Bullion), and Beaumont's book fetched only 2 livres, 4 sous!

In a footnote at the end of ch. i. part iv. of Book V. of the W. of N. (367. 1), Adam Smith thus describes the book: "This work was compiled by the order of the court for the use of a commission employed for some years past in considering the proper means for reforming the finances of France. The account of the French taxes, which takes up three volumes in quarto, may be regarded as perfectly authentic. That of those of other European nations was compiled from such information as the French ministers at the different courts could procure. It is much shorter and probably not quite so exact as that of the French taxes." After these statements it is curious to find him quoting more from the fourth volume than from the other three. The quotations (usually giving the volume and page of the original) are as follows:—

- W. of N. V. ii. 367. 2 (the wine-cellar and apothecary's business of the city of Hamburg).
Ibid. 368. 2 (the public pawnshop or "Lombard" at Hamburg).

PARIS, 19 juin 1788.

MONSIEUR—J'ai l'honneur de vous envoyer un ouvrage que je viens de publier sur le traité de commerce entre nos deux Nations.

Je vous prie de l'agrérer comme un tribut de mon respect pour le Livre excellent dont vous avez enrichi le monde.

Vous trouverez que je n'ai pas traité mon sujet assez philosophiquement ; qu'il y a un grand nombre de vérités que je n'ai qu'indiquées ; qu'il y a plusieurs passages dans lesquels j'ai évité de choquer de front les préjugés de mes lecteurs, et j'ai commencé par applaudir à leurs intentions et à leurs vues avant d'exposer les vues préférables qui sont à suivre.

Monsieur, je voulais persuader même avant de les convaincre des gens animés jusqu'au fanatisme, et qui croiraient faire une action louable en entraînant les deux nations à la guerre pour les replonger sous les fers des Prohibitions respectives.

J'avais à combattre une opinion unanime et universelle dans mon pays. Toute opinion publique mérite d'être traitée avec égard, surtout lors qu'il faut qu'à l'instant l'administration se détermine contre elle. C'est lorsque la nécessité de prendre un parti n'est pas pressante que l'on peut fronder l'erreur de toute la hauteur de la vérité.

J'espère donc que vous pardonnerez les défauts de mon ouvrage qui ne me sont inconnus et dont quelques uns sont volontaires.

Il est encore plus important de bien faire que de bien dire. Si parlant comme attaché au Gouvernement on annonçait à nos négocians, à nos fabricans et à la Tourbe de nos administrateurs qu'il est inutile et dangereux de donner des encouragemens particuliers aux fabriques et à l'exportation de leurs ouvrages, non seulement on ne serait ni lu, ni écouté, mais on risquerait de décrier tellement les bons Principes qu'on en éloignerait le Gouvernement lui-même, et qu'on prolongerait de dix ans l'ignorance et ses funestes effets. En frappant les yeux d'une lumière trop vive, on leur rendrait la cécité.

Je sais que la Postérité sera éclairée. C'est à la génération présente que je voudrais être utile. Elle est dans l'enfance. Il lui faut encore des alimens proportionnés à la faiblesse.

Lorsque j'étais homme privé, j'étais plus hardi ; et je le redeviendrai en quittant la très petite part que j'ai à l'administration. Un simple citoyen peut dire ce qu'il lui plaît parce que personne n'imagine que les conseils des Princes ou des nations se déterminent d'après les livres. Mais si l'administration elle-même paraît vouloir suivre uniquement les Principes d'une nouvelle philosophie, les Préjugés s'ameutent autour d'elle de manière à lui interdire tout succès.

C'est ce que j'ai vu arriver à l'excellent M. Turgot, et c'est un malheur que j'ai partagé avec lui. Il a fallu dix ans pour qu'une partie de ses plans, celui de la suppression des corvées et celui de la formation des assemblées provinciales pussent se réaliser imparfaitement, et encore au prix des orages auxquels vous voyez notre Royaume en proie.

Il ne faut pas croire cependant que ces orages soient aussi nuisibles qu'ils le paraissent. Ils accoutumé à refléchir sur les intérêts et les droits des hommes ; ils murissent l'Etat gouvernant et l'Etat gouverné.

Nous marchons avec rapidité à une bonne constitution, qui contribuera ensuite à perfectionner même celle de votre Patrie ; et les bons principes après avoir été quelque tems concentrés entre les États unis d'Amérique, la France et l'Angleterre, se répandront enfin jusques sur les autres nations.

Vous avez beaucoup hâté cette utile révolution, les *Economistes*¹ français n'y auront pas nu, et ils garderont pour vous autant de respect, Monsieur, que vous daignez leur témoigner d'estime.

J'ai l'honneur d'être avec un respectueux attachement, Monsieur, votre très humble et très obéissant serviteur

Du PONT.

- The Universal Merchant, containing the Rationale of Commerce in theory and practice. An Inquiry into the Nature and Genius of Banks, their power, use, influence, and efficacy, the establishment and operative transactions of the Banks of London and Amsterdam, etc. By William Horsley. Printed by C. Say for W. Owen at Homer's, near Temple Bar. 4to. London, 1753.
- At page 109 a new title-page: A brief Disquisition into the nature of Gold and Silver, and into the Art of Assay, etc., being "a proper supplement to the preceding work." Dedicated to Henry Pelham.
- Bound with the above in one vol. is also: Further Explanations of some particular Subjects relating to Trade, Coin, and Exchanges, contained in the Universal Merchant. By N. M. [Nicholas Magens]. Printed by John Haberken, Gerrard Street, 1756. [This is the Postscript described below.]
- W. of N. I. xi. 95. 2. Ad. Sm. gives the figures "according to Mr. Meggens" (sic in all edd.) for the annual importation of gold and silver into Spain and Portugal circa 1750. "The great experience of this judicious merchant renders his opinion of considerable weight." The footnote giving exact reference to the "Postscript to the Universal Merchant, p. 15, and 16," appears first in the 2nd ed. of the W. of N. 1778. It concludes: "The postscript is to be found in few copies [of the Universal Merchant]; it corrects several errors in the book."

- (1) Mor. Sent. i. 197 (Part II. Sect. I. ch. v.) : "That remarkable distinction between justice and all the other social virtues, which has of late been particularly insisted upon by an author of very great and original genius."
- (2) Ibid. i. 475 (Part IV. ch. ii.) : "The same ingenious and agreeable author who first explained why utility pleases." (Criticism follows.)
- (3) Ibid. ii. 357 (Part VII. Sect. III. ch. iii.) 'Another system' is mentioned which explains the moral sentiments by sympathy, but in a different way from Ad. Smith. It "places virtue in utility."
- (4) The passage on Suicide, which does not occur in the 1st ed. of the Mor. Sent., but is to be found in the 6th ed. ii. 242-250 (Part VII. Sect. II.), may have been meant as a reply to Hume's posthumous Essay on Suicide.

- (7) Ibid. II. iv. 157. 1. (Mr. Hume's discussion of the relation of the discoveries of precious metals to the rate of interest is so satisfactory that Ad. Smith need not enter on the subject.) (Political Discourses.)
- (8) Ibid. III. iv. 181-182. (Mr. Hume is the only writer who has noticed how commerce introduces order and liberty.) (Political Discourses : Essays on Commerce and Luxury.)
- (9) Ibid. IV. i. 195. 1 : "Mr. Hume frequently takes notice of the inability of the ancient Kings of England to carry on without interruption any foreign war of long duration" (History).

(10) W. of N. V. i. 354. 2 to 355. 1 : "Most of the arts and professions, says by far the most illustrious philosopher and historian of the present age, are of such a nature" that the State consults its own interest best by leaving them alone; not so with the Church. This passage contains a long quotation from the History of England, Henry VIII. ch. iii. with unimportant verbal alterations, probably due to Ad. Smith's habit of dictating. See Life by Dugald Stewart, prefixed to Essays, p. lxxxvii. note.

- (1) Edinr. Rev. 1755, ii. 72. "Mr. Hobbes, Mr. Locke, and Dr. Mandeville, Lord Shaftesbury, Dr. Butler, Dr. Clarke, and Mr. Hutcheson," unlike the French writers, have all of them at least tried to be original, and to make some new contribution to the old stock.
- (2) Mor. Sent. ii. 197 (Part VII. Sect. I.) (Holds the theory that virtue consists in benevolence.)
- (3) Ibid. ii. 286 (Part VII. Sect. II. ch. iii.) Of all the patrons of the system that makes virtue consist in benevolence, "the late Dr. Hutcheson was undoubtedly beyond all comparison the most acute, the most distinct, the most philosophical, and what is of the greatest consequence of all, the soberest and most judicious." (Criticism follows.) (This eulogy occurs in all edd.)
- (4) Ibid. ii. 340 (Part VII. Sect. III. ch. ii.) (Dr. Hutcheson first precisely distinguished how far moral distinctions are due to reason and how far to sense and feeling.)

	(5) Mor. Sent. ii. 342 (Part VII. Sect. III. ch. iii.) (Quotes Hutcheson's "Inquiry concerning Virtue" on the "principle of approbation.") (Criticism follows.)

	W. of N. V. iii. 421. 1. "In the payment of the interest of the public debt, it has been said it is the right hand which pays the left." Melon says (towards the end of his Essai), "Les dettes d'un état sont des dettes de la main droite à la main gauche, dont le corps ne se trouvera point affoibli, s'il a la quantité d'alimens nécessaires et s'il sait les distribuer." Pinto approves the saying; but when Hume quotes it ("'Tis like transferring money from the right hand to the left," Essay on Public Credit) it is only, like Adam Smith, to condemn it.

	Essay on Anc. Logics and Metaph. 120-121 note. Speaking of Plato's theory of Ideas as separate from the world, Adam Smith says: "Is there any author in all antiquity who seems to understand it otherwise, earlier than Plutarch, an author who seems to have been as bad a critic in philosophy as in history, and to have taken everything at secondhand in both, and who lived after the origin of that eclectic philosophy from whence the later Platonists arose, and who seems himself to have been one of that sect?" W. of N. I. x. ii. 61. 2. (A thousand minae are said by Plutarch to have been the fee of Isocrates for teaching.)

- (1) Essay on Imitat. Arts, 197: "I have seen a Latin translation of Mr. Pope's Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, which in this respect [in imitation of natural sounds] very much excelled the original."
- (2) Essay of Imitat. Arts, 168. (Extravagant imitations on the stage. "The thunder rumbling from the mustard bowl and the thick hail of peas, so finely exposed by Mr. Pope"—namely, in Dunciad II. and Dunciad III.)
- (3) Essay on Engl. and Ital. Verses, 188. (When Mr. Pope says "Worth makes the man," etc. (Essay on Man, Ep. iv.), he is consciously stooping to a familiar style "in compliance with his subject," etc. Double rhymes occur oftener in Dryden than in Pope.)
- (4) Ibid. 190. (Essay on Man, Ep. i. 29, 30, quoted from memory, to illustrate unaccented last syllables. Line 30 is given with "strict connections" for "strong connections.")
- (5) Ibid. 192. (Pastorals, i. 1 quoted, to illustrate accentuation on first syllable; Essay on Man, Ep. i. 3, 4, on second syllable as in Tasso.)
- (6) Mor. Sent. i. 311 (Part III. ch. ii.) "The elegance and harmony of Pope" (in description of Gray, q.e.)
- (7) Ibid. "The Dunciad of Mr. Pope is an everlasting monument of how much the most correct as well as the most elegant and harmonious of all the English poets had been hurt by the criticisms of the lowest and most contemptible authors." Gray is described as equally sensitive.
- (8) Ibid. 314. (Addison caballing against Pope.)
- (9) Ibid. ii. 11, 12 (Part V. ch. i.) "Mr. Pope and Dr. Swift have each of them introduced a manner different from what was practised before, into all works that are written in rhyme, the one in long verses, the other in short." "All long verses are now written after the manner of the nervous precision of Mr. Pope."

	(10) Mor. Sent. ii. 255 (Part VII. Sect. II. ch. i.) “To the great Superintendent of the universe all the different events which the course of his providence may bring forth, what to us appear the smallest and the greatest, the bursting of a bubble, as Mr. Pope says, and that of a world, for example, were perfectly equal.” (Essay on Man, Ep. i.)

[Bound with Messance, etc., q.v., and described on list of contents as by Quesnay.]

W. of N. IV. ix. 304. 1 : "Mr. Quesnay, the very ingenious and profound author of this [Physiocratic] system," has illustrated it by "some arithmetical formularies" and an "Economical Table," presenting an ideal state.

Ibid. 304. 2. Being himself a physician, he looked at the body politic from a physician's point of view, and thought that it would only thrive "under a certain precise regimen," that of perfect liberty and perfect justice.

Ibid. 307. 1, 2. Followed "implicitly and without any sensible variation by the sect distinguished in the French republic of letters by the name of the Economists." His economical table is, according to Mirabeau (the Elder), one of the three greatest "inventions that have given stability to political societies." (See Mirabeau above.) There is another reference to the Economists in W. of N. V. ii. 373. 2, where the author speaks of a tax on Rent (varying with its amount and the productiveness of the soil) as recommended by "that sect of men of letters in France who call themselves the economists." In IV, ix, § 20, 1, he calls them "the French philosophers" who bent the rod the other way in order to straighten it.

	Mor. Sent. (1759) p. 474: "The systems of the Duke of Rochefoucault (sic) and Dr. Mandeville" seem to take away the distinction between vice and virtue, and have a wholly pernicious tendency. In the edition of 1790 Adam Smith dropped the reference to Rochefoucauld. The following extract from a letter written to Adam Smith by the grandson of Rochefoucauld, besides showing that the first of the two above books was presented by the family, is of general interest:—"PARIS, 3 mars 1778.—Le désir de se rappeler à votre souvenir, Monsieur, quand on a eu l'honneur de vous connoître, doit vous paroître fort naturel. Permettez que nous saisissons pour cela, ma Mère et moi, l'occasion d'une édition nouvelle des Maximes de La Rochefoucauld, dont nous prenons la liberté de vous offrir un exemplaire. Vous voyez que nous n'avons point de rancune, puisque le mal que vous avez dit de lui dans la Théorie des Sentimens Moraux ne nous empêche point de vous envoyer ce même ouvrage. Il s'en est même fallu de peu que je ne fisse encore plus, car j'avois eu peut-être la témérité d'entreprendre une traduction de votre Théorie; mais comme je venois de terminer la première partie, j'ai vu paroître la traduction de M. l'Abbé Blavet; et j'ai été force de renoncer au plaisir que j'aurois eu de faire passer dans ma langue un des meilleurs ouvrages de la vôtre. Il auroit bien fallu pour lors entreprendre une justification de mon grand-pere. Peut-être n'auroit-il pas été difficile, premièrement de l'excuser, en disant qu'il avoit toujours vu les hommes à la Cour et dans la guerre civile, deux théâtres sur lesquels ils sont certainement plus mauvais qu'ailleurs, et ensuite de justifier, par la conduite de l'auteur, les principes qui sont certainement trop généralisés dans son ouvrage. Il a pris la partie pour le tout; et, parceque les gens qu'il avoit eu le plus sous les yeux étaient animés par l'amour propre, il en a fait le mobile general de tous les hommes. Au reste, quoique son ouvrage mérite à certains regards d'être combattu, il est cependant estimable même pour le fond et beaucoup pour la forme." (Stewart's Life of Adam Smith, prefixed to Essays, p. lv.)

Rochefoucauld is quoted (on love and ambition) in Mor. Sent. i. 139 (Part I. Sect. III. ch. ii.), and the passage is the same in the 1st ed. (1759), p. 126.

Essay on Imitat. Arts, 165 seq. "An author more capable of feeling strongly than of analysing accurately, Mr. Rousseau of Geneva" attributes to Music by itself effects which it obtains only when conjoined with the scenery and action of the stage. Adam Smith is referring to the Lettre sur la Musique Française, 1753. In the Considerations concerning the First Formation of Languages (Mor. Sent. ii. 407) Ad. Sm. speaks of 'genera and species'—"of which the ingenious M. Rousseau of Geneva finds himself so much at a loss to account for the origin;" and (with unusual care) gives the reference, "Origine de l'Inégalité. Partie Première, pp. 376, 377. 	(1) Edinr. Rev. 1755, ii. 69. (His eulogy of the Encyclopédie.)
	(2) Ibid. 78. "Mr. Voltaire, the most universal genius perhaps which France has ever produced, is acknowledged to be, in almost every species of writing, nearly upon a level with the greatest authors of the last age, who applied themselves chiefly to one."
	(3) Ibid. 79. (His originality shows to great advantage in his last tragedy, the Orphan of China.)
	(4) Ibid. 79. (In a letter to Rousseau he disclaims responsibility for an edition of his History of the Last War, published under his name in Holland, and full of errors.)

- (5) Mor. Sent. i. 131, 132 (Part I. Sect. III. ch. ii.)
(On the real causes of the great fame of Louis XIV.)
- (6) Ibid. i. 302 (Part III. ch. ii.) is probably written with Voltaire's "Traité sur la Tolérance à l'occasion de la Mort de Jean Calas" (1763) in mind. The passage does not occur in the 1st ed. (1759). Calas was executed at Toulouse, where (as Brougham remarks, in "Men of Letters," ii. (1846), p. 112 n.) Adam Smith may have heard much about him in conversation.
- (7) Ibid. 311 (Part III. ch. ii.) (V.'s "sensibility" to criticism.)
- (8) Ibid. 330 (Part III. ch. ii.): "Vous y grillez sage et docte Platon, Divin Homère, éloquent Cicéron."
- (9) Ibid. 350 (Part III. ch. iii.) (Among the "poets and romance-writers" who are better instructors on love and friendship than Zeno or Epictetus.)
- (10) Ibid. 445-447 (Part III. ch. vi.) (The plot of the tragedy of Mahomet, "one of the finest of Mr. Voltaire," described.)
- (11) Ibid. ii. 9 (Part V. ch. i.) (The heroic verse of the Henriade is the same as the English burlesque.)
- (12) Ibid. 57 (Part VI. Sect. I.) See above (Swift).
- (13) Ibid. 92, 93 (Part VI. Sect. II. ch. i.) (Description of the hero and heroine of "that beautiful tragedy of Voltaire, the Orphan of China.")
- (14) W. of N. V. i. 364. 2, 365. 1. "It is observed by M. de Voltaire that Father Porée" was the only Professor France ever had whose works were worth the reading; and he goes on to tell us why Gassendi entered the Church (see above, Gassendi). "The observation of M. de Voltaire" may be applied to other countries besides his own.
